449 -H12 20P/2

AN ADDRESS

DELIVERED

BEFORE THE SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING

OF THE

VIRGINIA STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY,

NOVEMBER 4TH, 1858,

BY

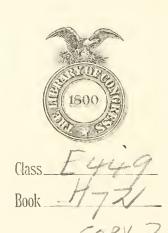

J. P. HOLCOMBE, Esq.

Published by unanimous request of the Society.

RICHMOND:

MACFARLANE & FERGUSSON. PUBLISHERS.

1856.

AN ADDRESS

DELIVERED

BEFORE THE SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING

OF THE

VIRGINIA STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY,

NOVEMBER 4TH, 1858,

BY

J. P. HOLCOMBE, Esq.

Published by unanimous request of the Society.

RICHMOND:

MACFARLANE & FERGUSSON. PUBLISHERS.

1858.

AN ADDRESS,

ON THE RIGHT OF THE STATE TO INSTITUTE SLAVERY-

Considered as a question of Natural Law, with special reference to African Slavery as it exists in the United States. Delivered before the Virginia State Agricultural Society, at the Seventh Annual Meeting, at Petersburg, November 4th, 1858.

By JAMES P. HOLCOMBE, Esq.

PUBLISHED BY UNANIMOUS REQUEST OF THE SOCIETY.

Mr. President, and

Gentlemen of the Agricultural Society:

It seems to me eminently proper, to con-such inexpressible magnitude, the politics dependent race which Providence has com- the Christian world. mitted to your guardianship—the stability The most instructive chapters in history nect with these imposing exhibitions of the of our country have been invested with the trophies of your agricultural skill, a dis-cussion of the whole bearings and rela-those great struggles upon which depend the tions, jural, moral, social, and economical, destinies of nations. The mad outbreaks of of that peculiar industrial system to which popular passion, the rapid spread of anarwe are so largely indebted for the results chical opinions, the mournful decay of anthat have awakened our pride and gratifica-cient patriotism, the wide disruption of tion. No class in the community has so Christian unity, which have marked the many and such large interests gathered up progress, and disclosed the power, purpose in the safety and permanence of that sys- and spirit of this agitation, come home to tem as the Farmers of the State. The main- your business and bosoms with impressive wheel and spring of your material prosper- emphasis of warning and instruction. No ity, interwoven with the entire texture of pause in a strife around which cluster all your social life, underlying the very founda- the hopes and fears of freemen, can give tions of the public strength and renown, to any earnest of enduring peace, until the lay upon it any rash hand would put in principles of law and order which cover peril whatever you value; the security of with sustaining sanction all the relations of your property, the peace of your society, our society, have obtained their rightful asthe well-being-if not the existence of that cendency over the reason and conscience of

of your government, the preservation in are those of opinions. The decisive battleyour midst of union, liberty, and civiliza- fields of the world furnish but vulgar and tion. By the introduction of elements of deceptive indices of human progress. Its true eras are marked by transitions of sen-|uninformed and unreflecting sentiment, detiment and opinion. Those invisible moral livered the commonwealth, when in the very forces that emanate from the minds of the jaws of death, from moral, social and politgreat thinkers of the race, rule the courses ical ruin. Permit me to premise some of history. The recent awakening of our words of explanation as to the meaning and Southern mind upon the question of Afri-extent of the subject upon which I have can Slavery, has been followed by a victory been invited to address this meeting. It of peace, which, we trust, will embrace presents no question of municipal or interwithin its beneficent influence generations national law. It raises no inquiry as to the and empires yet unborn. Such was the rightfulness of the means by which slavestrength of anti-slavery feeling within our ry was introduced into this continent, nor own borders, that searcely a quarter of into the nature of the legal sanctions under a century has elapsed since an Act of which it now exists. There can be no Emancipation was almost consummated, doubt that slavery, for more than a century under the auspices of our most intelli- after it was established in the English cologent and patriotic citizens; a measure nies, was in entire harmony with the Comwhich probably all would now admit bore mon Law, as it was expounded by the highin its womb elements of private distress est judicial authorities, and with the prinand public calamity, that must have impressed upon our history, through ages of expanding desolation, the lines of fire and But blood.

"Whirlwinds fitliest scatter pestilence."

Nothing less than an extremity of peril could have induced a general revision of long-standing opinions, intrenched in formidable prejudices, and sanctioned by the most venerable authority. Slavery was explored, for the first time, with the forward and reverted eye of true statesmanship, under all the lights of history-of social and political philosophy—of natural and Divine by which either was brought within its julaw. Public sentiment rapidly changed its face. Every year of controversy has encouraged the advocates of "discountenanc- not find them in existence, adapted to its ed truth" by the fresh accessions it has special wants and circumstances. African brought to their numbers, whilst no deser- Slavery in the United States is consistent tions have thinned the enlarging ranks. with Natural Law, because it all the bonds The celebrated declaration of Mr. Jefferson, of public authority were suddenly dissolved, that he knew no attribute of the Almighty and the community called upon to reconwhich would take the side of the master in struct its social and political system, the rea contest with his slave, is so far from com- lations of the two races remaining in other manding the assent of the intelligent slave- respects unaltered, it would be our right holders of this generation, that the justice, and duty to reduce the negro to subjection. the humanity, and the policy of the rela- To the phrase Natural Law, I shall attach tion as it exists with us, has become the in this discussion the signification in which prevailing conviction of our people. Publit is generally used, and consider it as sylie honours, and gratitude, are the fitting nonymous with justice; not that imperfect meed of the statesmen, whether living or justice which may be discerned by the savdead, (and amongst them I recall no names age mind, but those ethical rules, or princimore eminent than those associated with the ples of right, which, upon the grounds of their proudest traditions of this hospitable and own fitness and propriety, and irrespective of patriotic city, Leigh, Gholson, and Brown, the sanction of Divine authority, commend who threw themselves into this imminent themselves to the most cultivated human rea-ciples of the Law of Nations, and of Natural Law as laid down in the writings of the most eminent publicists. At the commencement of our Revolution men were living who remembered the Treaty of Utrecht, by which, in the language of Lord Brougham, all the glories of Ramillies and Blenheim were bartered for a larger share in the lucrative commerce of the slave trade. But whatever may be our present opinions upon these subjects, the black race now constitutes an integral part of our community, as much so as the white, and the authority of the State to adjust their mutual relations can in no manner depend upon the method risdiction. The State in every age must provide a constitution and laws, if it does and deadly breach, and grappling with an son. Slavery we may define, so as to embrace all the elements that properly belong to it, as the subject. The slave has sometimes, as at one period under the Roman jurisprudence, been reduced to a mere chattel, the power of the master over the person of the slave being as absolute as his property in his labour. This harsh and unnatural feature has never deformed the relation in any Christian country. In the United States the double character of the slave, as a moral person and as a subject of property, has been universally acknowledged, and to a greater or less degree protected, both by public sentiment and by the law of the land. It furnishes a key to the understanding of one of the most celebrated clauses in our Federal Constitution, as all know who are familiar with the luminous exposition, given by Mr. Madison in the Federalist, of its origin and meaning. In our own State, amongst other proofs of its recognition, we may point to the privilege conferred upon the master of emancipating his slave, and to the obligation imposed upon him of providing for his support when old, infirm, or insane; to the enactments which punish injuries to the slave, whether from a master or stranger, as offences of the same nature as if inflicted upon a white person, and to the construction placed by our courts upon the general language of criminal statutes, by which the slave, as a person, has been embraced within the range of their protection; to the regulations for the trial of slaves charged with the commission of crime, which, whilst they exact the responsibilities of moral agents, temper the administration of justice with mercy, and to the exemption from labour on the Lord's Day, an exemption which is shown by the provision for the Christian slave of a Jewish master, to have been established as a security for a right of conscience. Indeed, he scarcely labours under any personal disability, to which we may not find a counterpart, in those which attach to those incompetent classes—the minor, the lunatic, and the married wo-

The statement of my subject presupposes a condition or relation in which one man the existence of the State. It thus assumes is charged with the protection and support that there are involuntary restraints which of another, and invested with an absoluta be rightfully imposed upon men, for the lute property in his labour, and such a State itself is but the sum and expression of degree of authority over his person as may innumerable forms of restraint by which the be requisite to enforce its enjoyment. It is life, liberty, and faculties of individuals are a form of involuntary restraint, extending placed under the control of an authority into the personal as well as political liberty of dependent of their volition? The truth that the selfishness of human nature, forces upon us the necessity of submitting to the discipline of law, or living in the license of anarchy, is too obvious to have required any argument in its support, in this presence. Until man becomes a law unto himself, society through a political organization must supply his want of self-control. Whether it may establish such a form of restraint, as personal slavery, cannot be determined until the principles upon which its authority should be exercised, have been settled, and the boundaries traced between private right and public power. The authority of the State must be commensurate with the objects for which it was established. Its function is, to reconcile the conflicting rights, and opposing interests, and jarring passions of individuals, so as to secure the general peace and progress. It proceeds upon the postulate, that society is our state of nature and that men by the primary law of their being, are bound to live and perfect themselves in fellowship with each other.

As God does not ordain contradictory and therefore impossible things, men can derive no rights from him which are inconsistent with the duration and perfection of society. The rights of the individual are not such as would belong to him, if he stood upon the earth like Campbell's imaginary "Last Man," amidst unbroken solitude, but such only as when balanced with the equal rights of other men, may be accorded to each, without injury to the rest. The necessities of social existence, then, not in the rudeness of the savage state, but under those complex and refined forms which have been developed by Christian eivilization, constitute a horizon by which the unbounded liberty of nature is spanned and circumscribed.

This is no theory of social absolutism. It does not make society the source of our rights, which therefore might be conferred or withheld at its caprice or discretion, but it does regard the just wants of society, as the measure and practical expression of their extent. It is no reproduction of the inverting the natural relations of the parties, considered the aggrandizement of the State, without reference to the units of which it was composed, as the end of social union. The State was made for man, and not man for the State, but the cooperation of the State is yet so necessary to the perfection of his nature, that his interests require the renunciation of any claim inconsistent with its existence, or its value as an agency of civilization. It invades no province sacred to the individual, because the Divine Being who has rendered government a necessity, has made it a universal blessing, by ordaining a prëestablished harmony between the welfare of the individual and the restraints which are requisite to the well-being of society. Unless there is some fatal flaw in this reasoning, men have no rights which cannot be reconciled with the possession of a restraining power by the State, large enough to embrace every variety of injustice and oppression, for which society may furnish the occasion or the opportunity. The social union brings with it dangers and temptations, as well as blessings and pleasures and men cannot fulfil the law and purpose of their being, unless the State has authority to protect the community from the tumultuous and outbreaking passions of its members, and to protect individuals as far as it can be accomplished without prejudice to the community, from the consequences of their own incompetence, improvidence and folly. Such are the natural differences between men in character and capacity, that without a steady and judicious effort by the State to redress the balance of privilege and opportunity which these inequalities constantly derange, the rich must grow richer, and the poor poorer, until even anarchy would be a relief to the masses, from the suffering and oppression of society. Owing likewise to this variety of condition, and of moral and intellectual endowment, it is impossible to prescribe any stereotype forms admitting of universal application, under which the restraining discipline of law should be exercised. The ends of social union remain the same through all ages, be adapted to successive stages of advance-exploded error of the ancient statesmen, who different countries. The object being supreme in importance must carry with it as an incident, the right to employ the means which may be requisite to its attainment. The individual must yield property, liberty, life itself when necessary to preserve the life, as it were, of the collective humanity. To these principles, every enlightened government in the world, conforms its practice, protecting men not only from each other, but from themselves, graduating its restraints according to the character of the subject, and multiplying them with the increase of society in wealth, population and refinement. We cannot look into English or American jurisprudence without discovering innumerable forms of restraint upon rights of persons as well as rights of property, as in that absolute subordination of all personal rights to the general welfare, which lies at the foundation of the law for the public defence, the law to punish crimes, and the law to suppress vagrancy; or in those qualified restraints by which the administration of justice between individuals, has been sometimes enforced, as in imprisonment for debt; or in that partial and temporary subjection of one person to the control of another, either for the benefit of the former, or upon grounds of public policy, presented in the law of parent and child, guardian and ward, master and apprentice, lunatic and committee, husband and wife, officer and soldiers of the army, captain and mariners of the ship. Whether we proceed in search of a general principle, which may ascertain the extent of the public authority by a course of inductive reasoning, or by an observation of the practice of civilized communities, we reach the same conclusions. The State must possess the power of imposing any restraint without regard to its form, which can be shown by an enlarged view of social expediency, or upon an indulgent consideration for human infirmity, to be beneficial to its subject, or necessary to the general wellbeing.

In the legislation of Congress for the Indian tribes within our territory, and in that of great Britain for the alien and dependent nations under her jurisdiction, we see how the public authority, as flexible as comprebut the means of realizing those ends must hensive in its grasp, accommodates itself to the weakness and infirmity of races, as well as ment, and change with the varying intelli- of individuals. Upon what principles is the gence and virtue of individuals, and classes, British government administered in the East? and races, and the local circumstances of In 1833, on the application of the East In-

in a speech which would have delighted Burke, as much by its practical wisdom, as certain circumstances, to establish the relaits glittering rhetoric. An immense society was placed under the almost despotic rule of a few strangers. No securities were provided for liberty or property, which an Englishman would have valued. This system of servitude was vindicated, not on the grounds of abstract propriety, but of its adaptation to the wants and eircumstances of those upon whom it was imposed. India, it was urged, constituted a vast exception to all those general rules of political science which might be deduced from the experience of Europe. Her population was disqualified by character and habit, for the rights and privileges of British freemen. In their moral and social amelioration, under British rule, was to be found the best proof of its justice and policy. It was a despotism no doubt, but it was a mild and paternal one; and no form of restraint less stringent could be substituted with equal advantage to those upon whom it was to operate. It has often occurred to me in reading those fervid declamations upon Southern slavery, with which this great orator has inflamed the sensibilities of the British public, that his lessons of sober and practical statesmanship, from which no English ministry has ever departed, might be turned with irresistible recoil upon their author. Was American slavery introduced by wrong and violence? India was "stripped of her plumed and jewelled turban," by rapine and injustice. Are the relations of England to India, so anomalous that it would be unsafe to accept generalizations drawn from the experience of other communities? History might be interrogated in vain, for a parallel to the condition of our Southern society. Are the Hindoos unfit for liberty? Not more so than the African. Is despotism necessary in India, because it is problematical whether crime could be repressed or social order preserved under more liberal institutions? The danger of license and anarchy would be far more imminent, from an emancipation of our slaves. If the statesman despairs of making brick without straw in the East, can he expect to find the problem easier in the West? Has the Hindoo improved in arts and morals under the beneficent sway of his British master? In the transformation of the African savage into the Christian slave, the relative advance has been immeasurably greater, ties, for the protection of the individual and dia Company for a renewal of its charter, they | The truth is, that the principles which lie were explained and defended by Macaulay at the foundation of all political restraint, may make it the duty of the State under tion of personal servitude. All forms of restraint involve the exercise of power over the individual without his consent. inconsistent with any theory of natural right which elaims for man, a larger measure of liberty than can be reconciled with the peace and progress of the society in which he lives. All operate harshly at times upon individuals. All are reflections upon human nature, are alike wrong in the abstract. is right in the concrete, when necessary to the welfare of the community in which it exists, or beneficial to the subject upon whom it is imposed. If society may establish the institution of private property, involving restrictions by which the majority of mankind are shut out from all access to that great domain which the author of nature has stocked with the means of subsistence for his children, and justify a restraint so comprehensive and onerous, by its tendency to promote eivilization; if it may discriminate between classes and individuals, and apportion to some a larger measure of political liberty than it does to others; if it may take away life, liberty or property when demanded by the public good: if, as in various personal relations, it may protect the helpless and incompetent, by placing them under a guardianship proportioned in the term and extent of its authority to the degree and duration of the infirmity; why if a commensurate necessity arises, and the same great ends are to be accomplished, is its claim to impose upon an inferior race the degree of personal restraint which may be requisite to coerce and direct its labour, to be treated as a usurpation? The authority of the State under proper cireumstances, to establish a system of slavery, is one question; the existence of those circumstances, or the expediency of such legislation is another and entirely distinct ques-No doubt a much smaller capacity for self-control, and a much lower degree of intelligence must concur, to justify personal slavery, than would be sufficient to impart validity to other forms of subordination. No doubt the public authority upon this as upon every other subject, may be abused by the selfish passions and interests of men. once acknowledge the right of society to establish a government of pains and penalthe promotion of the general welfare, then unless it can be shown that slavery can in no instance be necessary to the well being of the community, or conducive to the happiness of the subject, (a proposition which is inconsistent with the admission of all respectable British and American abolitionists that any plan of emancipation in the Southern States, should be gradual and not immediate;) once make this fundamental concession, and the rightfulness of slavery, like that of every other form of restraint, becomes a question of time, place, men and

The people of the United States accepting without much reflection, those expositions of human rights embodied in the infidel philosophy of France, and glowing with that generous enthusiasm to communicate the blessings of liberty which is always inspired by its possession, have been disposed to look with common aversion upon all forms of unequal restraint. Ravished by the di- only relation between the races, in which the vine airs of their own freedom, they have superior can preserve the civilization that imagined that its strains, like those heard by the spirit in Comus, might create a soul sition can indeed be demonstrated by plenaunder the ribs of death. Forgetting the ry evidence, and it is sufficient by itself to ages through whose long night their fathers acquit the slaveholder of all guilt in the eye ed an equal liberty, as the universal birth- dicated upon no higher ground, every geneful tears of new-born freedom" over the broken chains of servitude, they have welcompublican States, with plaudit, and sympathy, and benediction. But, alas! the crimes they have not broken the power of its spells over the heart, have dispersed the illusions of our understanding. What has become of France, Italy, Greece. Mexico, Spanish America? that stately fleet of freedom, which when first launched upon the seas of time, with all its bravery on, was "courted by every wind that held it play." A part has been swallowed up in the gulfs of anarchy and despotism—the rest still float above the wave, but with rudder and anchor gone, stripped of every bellying sail and steadying

The melancholy experience of both hemispheres has compelled all but the projectors of revolution to acknowledge, that the forms of liberty are valueless without its spirit, and that an attempt to outstrip the march of Providence, by conferring it on a people unprepared for its enjoyments by habit, tradition, or character, is an indescribable folly which instead of establishing peace, order and justice, will be more likely to inaugurate a reign of terror and crime in which civilization itself may perish.

If the justice or fitness of slavery is to be determined, like other forms of involuntary restraint, not by speculative abstractions, but by reference to its adaptation to the wants and circumstances of the community in which it is established, and especially of the people over whom it is imposed, it only remains that we should apply these principles to the question of African Slavery in the United States. I shall not defend it as the renders life dear and valuable. This propowrestled for this blessing, they have regard- of morals. But if the system could be vinright of humanity. Hence, as they have rous spirit would grieve over the mournful witnessed nation after nation throwing off necessity which rendered the degradation of its old political bondage, and in the first the black man indispensable to the advancetransports of emotion, "shedding the grate-ment of the white. Providence has condemned us to no such cruel and unhappy fate. The relation in our society is demanded them into the glorious fellowship of re- ed by the highest and most enduring interests of the slave, as well as the master. It exists and must be preserved for the benefit which have been committed in the name of of both parties. Duty is indeed the tenure liberty, the social disorder and political con- of the master's right. Upon him there rests vulsion which have attended its progress, if a moral obligation to make such provision for the comfort of the slave, as after proper consideration of the burthens and casualities of the service, can be deemed a fair compensation for his labour; to allow every innocent gratification compatible with the steady, though mild discipline, as necessary to the happiness as the value of the slave; to furnish the means and facilities for religious instruction; and to contribute, as far and fast as a proper regard to the public safety will permit, to his general elevation and improvement. For oppression or injustice, allow me to say, I have no excuse to offer. I am willing to accept the sentiment of the heathen philosopher, and to regard a [&]quot;Like ocean wreeks, to illuminate the storm."

And whenever a slaveholder is found who so far forgets the sentiments of humanity, the feelings of the gentleman, and the principles of the Christian, as to abuse the authority which the law gives him over his slaves, I trust that a righteous and avenging public sentiment will pursue him with the scorn and degradation which attend the husband or father, who by eruel usage makes home intolerable to wife or child. Personal and political liberty are both requisite to develop the highest style of man. They furnish the amplest opportunities for the exercise of that self-control which is the germ and essence of every virtue, and for that expansive and ameliorating culture by which our whole nature is exalted in the scale of being, and clothed with the grace, dignity and authority, becoming the lords of creation. Whenever the population of a State is homogeneous, although slavery may perform some important functions in quickening the otherwise tardy processes of civilization, it ought to be regarded as a temporary and provisional relation. If there are no radical differences of physical organization or moral character, the barriers between classes are not insurmountable. The discipline of education and liberal institutions, may raise the serf to the level of the baron.-Against any artificial circumscription seeking to arrest that tendency to freedom which is the normal state of every society of equals, human nature would constantly rise in rebellion. But where two distinct races are collected upon the same territory, incapable from any cause of fusion or severance, the one being as much superior to the other in strength and intelligence as the man to the must either terminate in its destruction, or child, there the rightful relation between them is that of authority upon the one side, and subordination in some form, upon the sonal servitude gave reasonable assurance other. Equality, personal and political, could of preserving the inferior race, and gradunot be established without inflicting the cli- ally imparting to it the amelioration of a max of injustice upon the superior, and of higher civilization, no Christian statesman eruelty on the inferior race: for if it were could mistake the path of duty. Natural possible to preserve such an arrangement, it law, illuminated in its decision by History, would wrest the sceptre of dominion from Philosophy, and Religion, would not only the wisdom and strength of society, and sur-render it to its weakness and folly. "Of all tice, but lend to it the lustre of mercy. It rights of man," says Carlyle, "the right of will not, I apprehend, be difficult to show the ignorant man to be guided by the wiser, that all these conditions apply to African slato be gently and firmly held in the true very in the United States. Look at the course, is the indispensablest. Nature has races which have been brought face to face ordained it from the first. Society struggles in unmanageable masses, upon this continent, man's treatment of his slaves as a test of his complishing it, more and more. If freedom have any meaning, it means enjoyment of this right, in which all other rights are enjoyed. It is a divine right and duty on both sides, and the sum of all social duties between the two." Under the circumstances I have supposed, no intelligent man could hesitate, except as to the form of subordination: nor has entire equality been ever allowed in society where the inferior race constituted an element of any magnitude.

Personal servitude is generally the harshest and most objectionable form of restraint. exposing its subjects to an abuse of power involving greater suffering than any other. But this is not an invariable law, even in a homogeneous society. The most recent researches into the condition of the labouring classes of Europe, the descendants of the emancipated serfs, have satisfied all candid inquirers after truth that a large number have sunk below the level of their ancient slavery, and would be thankful to belong to any master who would furnish them with food, clothing and shelter. But when we are settling the law of a society embracing in its bosom distinct and unequal races, the problem is complicated by elements which create the gravest doubt whether personal liberty will prove a blessing or a curse. may become a question between the slavery, and the extinction or further deterioration of the inferior race. Thus, if it is difficult to procure the means of subsistence from density of population or other cause, and if the inferior race is incapable of sustaining a competition with the superior in the industrial pursuits of life, a condition of freedom which would involve such competition, consign it to hopeless degradation. under these circumstances, a system of pertowards perfection by conforming to and ac- and it is impossible to mistake their relative and subordinate place, which as the pictured monuments of Egypt attest, it has occupied since the dawn of history; a race which during the long-revolving cycles of intervening time has founded no empire, built no towered city, invented no art, discovered no truth, bequeathed no everlasting possession to the future, through law-giver, hero, bard, or benefactor of mankind: a race which, though lifted immeasurably above its native barbarism by the refining influence of Christian servitude has yet given no signs of living and selfsustaining culture. The other, a great comsom all the vital elements of human progress; which, crowned with the traditions of history and bearing in its hands the most precious trophies of civilization, still rejoices in the human understanding. overflowing energy, the abounding strength, the unconquerable will which have made it it utterly hopeless. The removal of our "the heir of all the ages;" and which with aspirations unsatisfied by centuries of toil and achievement, still vexes sea and land with its busy industry, binds coy nature faster in its chains, embellishes life more prodigally with its arts, kindles a wider inspiration from the fountain lights of freedom, follows knowledge,

"like a sinking star, Beyond the utmost bound of human thought," and pushing its unresting columns still further into the regions of eldest Night, in lands more remote than any over which Roman eagles ever flew, "to the farthest verge of the green earth," plants the conquering banner of the Cross,

" Encircling continents and oceans vast, In one humanity."

It is impossible to believe that the supremacy in which the Caucasian has towered over the African through all the past can be shaken, or that the black man can ever successfully dispute the preeminence with his white brother as members of the same community, in the arts and business of life. Could such races be mated with each other? It is unnecessary to refer to Egypt or Central America, where a mongrel population, monumenta veneris nefandie, exhibit the de-than the African. It is received into a comteriorating influence of a similar fusion. If munity, whose strength and vitality enable there were no broad and indelible dividing it to absorb and assimilate a much larger lines of colour and physical organization to foreign element than any of which history keep the black and white races apart, their has any record. If the black man was position. The one still filling that humble respective traditions, extremes of moral and intellectual advancement, and unequal aptitudes, if not capacities for higher civilization. separate them by an impassible gulf. feeble remnant of our kindred, who, surrounded by hordes of barbarians, yet linger among the deserted seats of West India civilization, may forget the dignity of Anglo-Saxon manhood, in the despair and poverty to which they have been reduced by British injustice: but we "sprung of earth's first blood," and "foremost in the files of time," who under Providence are masters of our destiny, will never permit the generations of American posite race which has incorporated into its bo- history to be bound together by links of shame. Is the deportation of the African race practicable? A more extravagant project was never seriously entertained by the There are economical considerations alone, which would render black population would create a gap in the industry of the world, which no white imigration could fill. It would bring over the general prosperity of the country a blight and ruin, that would dry up all the sources of revenue on which the success of the measure would depend. Its consequences would not terminate with this continent. The great wheel which moves the commerce and manufactures of the world, would be arrested in its revolutions. General bankruptey would follow a shock, besides which the accumulated financial crises of centuries would be unfelt. In the recklessness and despair of crime and famine thus induced, the ancient landmarks of empire might be disturbed, and all existing governments shaken to their foundation. No favorable inference can be drawn from immense emigration, which, like the swell of a mighty sea, is pouring upon our shores. It comes from regions where population is too dense for subsistence and where a vacant space is closed as soon as it is opened. It is impelled by double influences, neither of which can operate to any extent upon the American slave, want and wretchedness at home, and all material and moral attractions abroad. It is composed of men accustomed at least to personal freedom, and belonging to races endowed with far more energy and intelligence

he must carry with him the habits and feel- America, and the destruction of the aborigiings of the slave. Can it be supposed that such a living cloud as the annual increase of our slaves, could discharge its contents into the bosom of any African society, without blighting in the license of their first emancipation from all restraint, whatever promise of civilization it might have held out.

If we must accept the permanent residence of this race upon our soil, as a providential arrangement beyond human control, it only remains to adjust the form of its subordination. Should it embrace personal, as well as political servitude? Personal slavery surrounds the black man with a protection and salutary control which his own reason and energies are incapable of supplying, and by converting elements of destruction into sources of progress, promotes his physical comfort, his intellectual culture, and his moral amelioration. Emancipation upon the other hand in any form, gradual or immediate, would either destroy the race through a wasting process of poverty, vice, and crime, or sink it into an irrecoverable deep of savage degradation. What Homer has said may be true, that a free man loses half his value the day he becomes a slave; but it is quite as true, that the slave who is converted into a freeman, is more likely to lose the remaining half than to recover what is gone. There are no rational grounds upon which we could anticipate for our slaves, an advancing civilization if they were emancipated, or upon which we could expect them to preserve their contented temper, their material comfort, their industrious habits, and their general morality. The negro has learned much in contact with the white man, but he is yet ignorant of that great art which is the guardian of all acquisition, the art of self-government. The superiority of the white man in skill, energy, foresight, providence, aptitude for improvement, and control over the lower appetites and passions, would give him a decisive and fatal advantage in the pitiless competition of life. The light which history sheds around this problem, is broad and unchanging. Wherever off. As population becomes denser, our free unequal races are brought together, unless blacks are destined to exemplify the same reduced by despotism to an indiscriminate great law. In the free States, where an enservitude, or mingled by a deteriorating and croaching tide of white imigration is driving demoralizing fusion, the inferior must choose them from one field of industry after another, between slavery and extinction. Upon these they already stand, as the statistics of popu-

able and willing to return to his native land, tion of the Indian inhabitants of Spanish nal races which have crossed the path of English colonization. All the lower stages of civilization are characterized by an improvidence of the future and a predominance of the animal nature, which increase the force of temptation, and at the same time diminish the power of resistance. Hence it is, that when an inferior race, animated by the passions of the savage, but destitute of the restraining self-control which is developed by civilization, is brought in contact with a higher form of social existence, where the stimulants and facilities for sensual gratification are multiplied, and the consequences of excess and improvidence aggravated in fatality, it is mown down by a mortality more terrific than the widest waste of war. Private charity and the influence of Christianity upon individuals may retard the operation of these causes, but destruction is only a question of time. Without a judicious husbandry of the surplus proceeds of labour in the day of prosperity to meet the demands of age, sickness and casualty, poverty alone with the disease, suffering and crime that attend it, would wear out any labouring population. The remnant of the Indian tribes seattered along the lower banks of the St. Lawrence, present an impressive illustration of these simple political truths. "They manifest," says Prof. Bowen, "sufficient industry when the reward of labour is immediate: but surrounded by an abundance of fertile and cleared land, where others would grow rich, they are rapidly perishing from improvidence alone."

Even in England, in periods of manufacturing prosperity, when wages are high, the Chancellor of the Exchequer reckons with as much confidence upon the expenditure by the operatives of their surplus profits, in spirits, tobacco, and other hurtful stimulants, as upon the proceeds of the income tax .-And if the working class of England, instead of being constantly recruited from a higher order of society, consisted of an inferior race, the annual losses from intemperance and improvidence would soon carry it principles only can we explain the preserva- lation, disease and crime disclose, upon the structive agencies which would be let loose ments, has no sympathies with slavery, in increased by a constant accession of numbers to the white through emigration, it is not extravagant to assert that exterminating massacre would involve a swifter, but scarcely more certain or more cruel death.

If emancipation took place in a tropical region, where climate forbade the competition of white labour, and the exuberance of of seventeen sent out into the world, has nature supplied the means of life without continued a boy, and does as other boys do. the necessity of intelligent and systematic The diminution of the agricultural exported industry, there are other causes which would produce of the islands to less than a half, remove from the slave every safeguard of proves how much their industry has declin-progress, and render his relapse into barba-ed. The reduction of their consumption rism inevitable. Civilization depends upon of British produce and manufactures in a activity, development, progress. It is measimilar proportion, tells unequivocally how sured by our wants and our work. Without much their means of comfort and enjoyment indulging in any rash generalizations, we have fallen off. Generally speaking, the may safely affirm, that where animal life can incipient civilization of the negro has been be sustained without labour, and an enerva- arrested by his emancipation: with the cesting climate invites to indolent repose, we sation of forced labour, the habits which cannot expect from that class of society spring from and compensate it, have disapupon whom in every country the cultivation peared, and savage habits and pleasures have of the soil depends, any industrious emula- resumed their ascendency over the sable narrowest isthmus which can divide life from exertion. The English historian, Alison, When we remember that the de- who, whatever may be his political sentiamongst our slaves, by imancipation, are as his last volume, thus describes the result of fatal to morals as to life, and that the natu- the experiment. "But disastrous as the reral inequality between the races would be sults of the change have been to British interests both at home and in the West Indies, they are as nothing to those which have ensued to the negroes themselves, both in their native seats and the Trans-Atlantic Colonies. The fatal gift of premature emancipation has proved as pernicious to a race as it always does to an individual: the boy tion. So powerful is the influence of these race. The attempts to instruct and civilize physical causes over barbarous tribes, that them have, for the most part, proved a failunder the torrid zone, as we are informed ure; the dolce far niente equally dear to the by Humboldt, where a beneficent hand has unlettered savage as to the effeminate Europrofusely scattered the seeds of abundance, pean, has resumed its sway; and the emanindolent and improvident man experiences cipated Africans dispersed in the woods, or periodically a want of subsistence which is in cabins erected amidst the ruined plantaunfelt in the sterile regions of the North. tions, are fast relapsing into the state in As men increase in virtue and intelligence, which their ancestors were when first torn they become more capable of resisting the from their native seats by the rapacity of a operation of climate and other natural laws, Christian avariee." A melancholy confirbut some form of slavery has been the only mation of this statement is furnished by a basis upon which civilization has yet rested fact which I have learned from a reliable in any tropical country. If it can be sus-private source, that the prevailing crimes of tained upon any other, it must be by a race this population have changed from petty larendowed with a larger fund of native energy ceny to felonies of the highest grades. But than the African, or quickened by the electif the black race could escape barbarism, or tric power of a higher culture than he has defy those destroying elements of society, ever possessed. His moral and physical poverty and erime, there is a more compre-conformation predispose him to indolence, hensive political induction which establishes Calum non animum mutant, has been the the justice and expediency of its subjection law of his history. Under the Code Rural to servitude. If in any community there is of Hayti, the harshest compulsion has been an inferior race which is condemned by perused to subdue the sloth of barbarism, and manent and irresistible causes to occupy the to compel the labour of the free black man, condition of a working class, not as indepenbut in vain. In the British West Indies, dent proprietors of the soil they till, but as since emancipation, no expedients have pro-labourers for hire, then a system of personal ven effectual to conquer this repugnance to slavery under which the welfare of the slave could be connected with the interest of the share of the profits, and throws all the losses, master, would be far preferable to the collec- involving pauperism and despair, upon the tive servitude of a degraded caste. This masses," Nothing can be more hopeless proposition supposes the existence, not of an than the condition of the agricultural labourinferior class simply, but an inferior racewhich, as such, is condemned by nature to wear the livery of servitude in some formwhich can never be quickened or sustained by those animating prospects of wealth, dignity and power which, in a homogeneous community, pour a renovating stream of moral health through every vein and artery of social life-which must earn a scanty and precarious subsistence by a stern, unintermitting and unequal struggle with selfish eapital. Can any skepticism resist the conviction that, under such circumstances, a social adjustment which would engage the selfish passions of the superior race to provide for the comfort of the inferior, must be an arrangement of mercy as well as of justice? Upon this question the experience of England is full of instruction. The abolition of slavery upon the continent of Europe gradually converted the original serfs into owners of the soil. In England, it terminated with personal manumission-leaving the villein to work as a labourer for wages, or to farm as a tenant upon lease. What has been the effect of this great social revolution? I do not refer to that saturnalia of poverty, misery, vagrancy, and crime which immediately followed the disruption of the old feudal bonds, and the adjustment of the new relations of lord and vassal, by the "cold justice of the laws of political heathen who have been nursed in the bosom economy." What is the present condition of her Christianity. The intelligent philanof the English labourer? English writers, thropists of England, place their whole hope whose fidelity and accuracy are above suspi- of remedy in plans of colonization-plans eion, have almost exhausted the power of for substituting cooperative associations for language in describing his abject wretched- the system of hired service-plans for inness and squalid misery. They have distri- creasing the number of peasant proprietors, comfortable, the poor, and the perishing dent basis-for educating the working class, That "bold peasantry, their country's pride," and for legislation which will facilitate the has almost disappeared. Every improve- circulation of capital, and the more equal ment in an industrial process which dimin-distribution of property. But if this evil merchant, or manufacturer, plays the game, to nature, but to the vantage ground of op-wins all the high stakes, takes the lion's portunity. Nature has implanted a con-

er. All the life of England, says Bowen in his lectures on Political Economy, "is in her commercial and manufacturing classes. Outside of the city walls, we are in the middle ages again. There are the nobles and the serfs, true eastes, for nothing short of a miraele can elevate or depress one who is born a member of either." Moral and intellectual enlture cannot be connected with physical destitution and suffering. We are not therefore surprised to learn, from a recent British Quarterly, that there is an overwhelming class of outcasts at the bottom of their society whom the present system of popular education does not reach, who are below the influence of religious ordinances, and scarcely operated upon by any wholesome restraint of public opinion. For the relief of this wretchedness an immense pauper system has grown up, as grinding in its exactions upon the rich, as demoralizing in its bounties to the poor. But even this frightful evil appears insignificant, in comparison with that embittered and widening fend between the classes of society, which has filled the most sauguine friends of human progress with the apprehension, that England's greatest danger may spring from the despair of her own children, the beggars who gaze in idleness and misery at her wealth, the savages who stand by the side of her civilization, and the buted their population into the rich, the and thus placing labour on a more indepenishes the amount of human labour, brings working in the heart in the nation be incuwith it more or less of suffering to the Eng-rable, if the helotism of the working classes lish operative. Every scarce harvest, every should prove, as it has already been profluctuation in trade, every financial crisis exposes him to beggary or starvation. In the cating a reduction of the English labourer selfish competition between the capitalist and to slavery. There is no radical distinction workman, says a distinguished christian philanthropist, "the capitalist, whether farmer, talist. The latter owes his superiority, not

sciousness of equality, so deeply in the bo-the country, could be distributed between som of the labourer, that personal slavery them as tenant proprietors. If it was given would bring with it a sense of degradation to them to day, their improvidence would he could never endure. Whatever the gen- make it the property of the white man to eral destitution and sufferings of his class, morrow. Indeed, the fact to which Mr. an undying hope will ever whisper to the Webster called attention, that the products individual that a happy fortune may raise of the slave-holding States are destined him to comfortable independence, or social m ainly, not for immediate consumption, consideration. The very thought, that from but for purposes of manufacture and comhis loins may spring some stately figure to mercial exchange, exclude the possibility of tread, with dignity the shining eminences of an extended system of tenant proprietorship, life, is able to alleviate many hours of des- and render cultivation and disposal by capipondency. love of liberty, such as was felt by the Spar-black man if emancipated must work for tan when he compared it to the sun, the hire. Would he be better able to hold his most brilliant, and at the same time, the own against the capitalist than the English most useful object in creation, cherished in labourer? Would not the misery and degthe Englishman by the traditions of centu- radation of the latter, but faintly foreshadow ries of struggle in its achievement and de- the doom of the emancipated slave? His fence, cause him to echo the sentiment of days embittered and shortened by privation; his own poet,

"Bondage is winter, darkness, death, despair, Freedom, the sun, the sea, the mountains and

I fully subscribe to an opinion which has been expressed by an accomplished Southern writer, that an attempt to enslave the English labourer would equal, though it could not exceed in folly, an attempt to liberate the American slave—either seriously attempted and with sufficient power to oppose the natural current of events would overwhelm the civilization of the continent in which it occurred in anarchy. But if the English labourer belonged to a different race from his employer; if they were separated by a moral and intellectual disparity such as divides the Southern slave from his master: if instead of the sentiments and traditions of liberty which would make bondage worse than death, he had the gentle, tractable and submissive temper that adapt the African to servitude, who can doubt that a slavery which would insure comfort and kindness, would improve his condition in all its aspects?

None of the circumstances which prevent the application of the general proposition we have been discussing to the English labourer, extend to the American slave-none of ter and slave may not be as numerous or powthe plans which have been suggested for the relief of the former would offer any hope of and the black man, in any society in which amelioration to the latter. No man who they are recognised as equals, and in which

But above all, an instinctive tal upon a large scale indispensable. The cheered by no hope of a brighter future; the burthens of liberty without its privileges; the degradation of bondage without its compensations; "the name of freedom graven on a heavier chain;" his root in the grave, the liberated negro under the influence of moral causes as irresistible as the laws of gravity, would moulder earthward. What is there, may I not ask, in the misery and desolation of this collective servitude, to compensate for the sympathy, kindness, comfort, and protection which so generally solace the suffering, and sweeten the toil, and make tranquil the slumber, and contented the spirits of the slave, whose lot has been cast in the sheltering bosom of a Southern home? The approximation to equality in numbers, which has been hastily supposed to render emancipation safer than in the West Indies, would give rise to our greatest danger. will not be long before the unmixed white population of the West Indies will be reduced, by the combined influences of emigration and amalgamation, to a few factors in the sea ports. In the United States, not only would the exodus of either race or their fusion, be impracticable, but the pride of civilization, which now stoops with alaerity to bind up the wounds of the slave, would spurn the aspiring contact of the free man. The points of sympathy between maserful as we could desire, but between the white knows anything of the negro character, the latter are sufficiently numerous to create can for a moment suppose that the land of apprehension as to the consequences of distrust and aversion, a growing ill-will would by its overlooking those fundamental moral lighted torches-

"Point to the Persian abodes, And glittering temples of their hostile gods."

But what would be the ferocity awakened in half-savage bosoms, when embittered memories of long-descended hate towards a supepangs of want, impelled them to seek retribution for centuries of imaginary wrong? to self-respect. A civilization like our own Either that precious harvest of civilization could be developed only by a free people; which has been slowly ripening under the but under a system of slavery to a superior toils of successive generations of our fath- race, which as ameliorated by the charities would be gathered by the rude sons of spoil, mated by that love of liberty which Bacon through long ages of after time.

deepen into irreconcilable animosity. Look differences between the races, which constiat the isolation in which, notwithstanding tute a far more important element in the potheir insignificance as a class, the free blacks litical arrangements of society, than relative of the North now live. "The negro," says intellectual lower. It is immaterial how De Tocqueville, "is free, but he can share these differences have been created. Their neither the rights, nor the pleasures, nor the existence is certain; and if capable of relabour, nor the affections, nor the altar, nor moval at all, they are yet likely to endure the tomb of him whose equal he has been for such an indefinite period, that in the declared to be. He meets the white man consideration of any practical problem, we upon fair terms, neither in life nor in death." must regard them as permanent. The col-What could be expected from a down-trod-lective superiority of a race can no more exden race, existing in masses large enough to empt it from the obligations of justice and be formidable, in whose bosoms the law it- mercy, than the personal superiority of an self nourished a sense of injustice by pro-claiming an equality which Nature and so-ciety alike denied, with passions unrestrain-telligent estimate of their several aptitudes ed by any stake in the public peace, or any and capacities must form the basis of their bonds of attachment to the superior class, social and political organization. The intelbut that it should seek in some frenzy of lectual weakness of the black man is not so despair, to shake off its doom of misery and characteristic, as the moral qualities which degradation? Would not the atrocities distinguish him from his white brother. The which have always distinguished a war of warmest friends of emancipation, amongst races, be perpetrated on a grander and more others the late Dr. Channing, have acknowappalling scale than the world has ever yet ledged that the civilization of the African, witnessed? The recollections of hereditary must present a different type from that of feud alone have, in every age, so inflamed the Caucasian, and resemble more the dethe angry passions of our nature as to lend velopment of the East than the West. His a deeper gloom even to the horrors of war, nature is made up of the gentler elements. When the poet describes the master of the Docile, affectionate, light-hearted, facile to lyre, as seeking to rouse the martial ardour impression, reverential, he is disposed to look of the Grecian conqueror and his attendant without for strength and direction. In the nobles, he brings before them the ghosts of courage that rises with danger, in the energy their Grecian ancestors that were left unbut that would prove a consuming fire to its posried on the plains of Troy, who tossing their sessor, if it found no object upon which to spend its strength, in the proud aspiring temper which would render slavery intolerable, he is far inferior to other races. Hence, subordination is as congenial to his moral, as a warm latitude is to his physical nature. Freedom is not "chartered on his manly brow" as on that of the native Indian. Unrior race, exasperated by the maddening kindness awakens resentment, but servitude alone carries no sense of degradation fatal ers, and the genial sunshine and refreshing of our religion, the African is capable of showers of centuries of kindly Providence, making indefinite progress. He is not anior peace would return after a tragedy of quaintly compared to a spark that ever flicth crime and sorrow, with whose burthen of in the face of him who seeketh to trample woe the voice of history would be tremulous it under foot. The masses of the old world, rough long ages of after time. under various forms of slavery, have exhibi-The whole reasoning of modern philanted a standing discontent, and their strugthropy upon this subject has been vitiated, gles for freedom have been the flashes of a smothered but deeply hidden fire. The obe-(it appears that for every African imported dience of the African, unless disturbed by into the United States, ten are now to be some impulse from without, and to which he found, such has been the wonderful growth yields only in a vague hope of obtaining re- of population; for every three imported into spite from labour, is willing and cheerful. the British West Indies, only one now ex-De Tocqueville, in his work on the French ists, such has been its frightful decline. Revolution, points out a difference between But however ample this protection may be nations, in what he calls the sublime taste to the slave from the oppression of stranfor freedom-some seeking it for its material gers, his own passions, it is arged, will lead blessings only, others for its intrinsic attract the master to spurn the restraints of intertions; and adds, "that he who seeks free-est. But what security against an abuse of dom for anything else than freedom's self, is power, has human wisdom ever devised made to be a slave." How fallacious must which is likely to operate with such uniform be any political induction which transfers to and prevailing force? As Burke said of the African that love of personal liberty, another social institution, "it makes our which wells from the heart of our own race weakness subservient to our virtue, and in a spring-tide of passionate devotion, the grafts our benevolence, even upon our avawinters of despotism could never chill. The rice." All the evidence which is accessi-Providence which appointed the Anglo-Sax-ble, the statistics of population, of consumpon to lead the van of human progress fitted tion as shown both by imports, and the balhim for his mission, by preconfiguring his ance between production and exports, and soul to the influences of freedom. This sen- the testimony of intelligent and candid timent is indestructible in his nature. It travellers bear witness to its general efficienwould survive the degradation of any form cy. And it is to be remarked that whilst or term of bondage. Like the sea shell, the slave partakes largely and immediately when torn from its home in the deep, his of his master's prosperity, the reverses heart, through all the ages of slavery, would which reduce the latter to beggary or star-has never been sufficiently appreciated, great measure beyond their reach, by the for, in truth, it has existed in connection circumstance that his hire or ownership imwith no other form of servitude. With ex-Greece and Rome, in the British and Spanthan to provide for them in life. Hence in Rome, the slaves of the public were better diate interest, not only in the life, but the labouring poor of his country. But it is health, comfort and improvement of his slave, for they all add to his value and efficiency as a labourer. Southern slavery must therefore be tried upon its own merits, and not by data true or false, collected from other forms of servitude. Arithmetic, Gibdiscredit all the reasoning, and pour con- rectly the reverse. tempt upon all the declamation which has a lit was truly said by Legaré, that parcere confounded our slavery with that of the subjectis, was not exclusively a Roman vir-Carey, in his Essay on the Slave Trade, that there were few men who did not feel

be vocal with the music of his native liberty, vation, pass almost harmless over his head. The strength of that security against op- In other countries the pressure of every pression which the Southern slave derives public calamity falls upon the working from the selfishness of human nature, classes: but with us the slave is placed in a port a condition of life in which the means ceptions too slight to deserve remark, in of subsistence are enjoyed. From the demoralization of extreme want, so fatal to ish colonies, it was cheaper to buy slaves virtue as well as happiness in other lands, he than to raise them, to work them to death, is thus always saved. It was the benevolent wish of Henry the Fourth, of France, that every peasant in his dominions might have a cared for than those of the individual, fowl in his pot for Sunday. In every age the With us, the master has a large and imme- patriot has offered a similar prayer for the only in the Southern States of our confederacy, that the sun ever beheld a meal of wholesome and abundant food, the daily reward of the children of toil.

The relation is so far from having any tendency to provoke those angry and resentbon once said, is the natural enemy of rhet- ful feelings which would excite the master oric, and a single statement will suffice to to acts of cruelty, that its tendency is di-

British West Indies. From the most re- tue: that it was a law of the heart, the liable calculations that can be made, says usual attribute of undisputed power; and the force of that beautiful and touching (as suited to Man, "to those who remember appeal: "Behold, behold, I am thy ser- the state of our domestic relations, when vant." It was owing to this principle that the old Scriptural terms of master and serwhen the dependence of the feudal vassal upon his lord was most complete, their mutual attachment, (as we are assured by Gilbert Stewart and other historians of this period,) was strongest, and as the feudal tenure decayed, and the law was interposed between them, the kindness upon one side and the affection and gratitude upon the other disappeared. It is not simply the consciousness of strength which tends to disarm resentment in the bosom of the master. It is the long and intimate association, connected with the feelings of interest awakened in all but the hardest hearts by the cares and responsibilities of guardianship which makes the slave an object of friendships, the attachment of master and serfriendly regard, and bring him within that circle of kindly sympathies which cluster of almost any other connection in life. The around the domestic hearth. It is a form of that generous feeling which bound the tune, will hardly live to see the eye of an Highland chieftain to his clan, and which, with greater or less force, depending upon the virtue of the age, attaches to every relation of patriarchal authority. According to Dr. Arnold, (in his tract on the Social The blessed sun of those good old days has Condition of the Operative Classes,) the old gone down, it may be for ever, and it is system of English slavery was far kinder very cold." It is through the operation of than that now existing in England of hired these kindly sentiments, which it awakens service. The affection between the master and the villain is shown by the fact that ciles the antagonism of classes that has villainage "wore out" by voluntary manumission—a circumstance which never would have happened had the relation been one simply of profit and loss. Shakspeare in his character of old Adam, in "As You Like It," has adverted to the more genial and kindly elements which distinguished this legal service from that for wages. Orof the old servant to go with him, and "do the service of a younger man in all his business and necessities," says-

"Oh good old man, how well in thee appears The constant service of the antique world, When service sweat for duty-not for meed."

The mutual good will of distinct classes has, in all ages, been dependent upon a well defined subordination. This opinion is confirmed by the testimony of one of the most eloquent writers of New England, in reference to the workings of its social system as they fell under his personal observation. "I appeal," says Dana in his Essay on Law ther. Written laws never to be received vant were in use. I do not fear contradiction when I say there was more of mutual good will then than now; more of trust on the one side and fidelity on the other; more of protection and kind care, and more of gratitude and affectionate respect in return; and because each understood well his place, actually more of a certain freedom, tempered by gentleness and by deference. From the very fact that the distinction of classes was more marked, the bond between the individuals constituting these two, was closer. As a general truth, I verily believe that, with the exception of near-blood relationships, and here and there peculiar vant was eloser and more enduring than that young of this day, under a change of forold, faithful servant fill at their fall; nor will the old domestic be longer housed and warmed by the fireside of his master's child, or be followed by him to the grave. on both sides, that African slavery reconelsewhere reduced the highest statesmanship to the verge of despair, and becomes the great Peace-maker of our society, converting inequalities, which are sources of danger and discord in other lands, into pledges of reciprocal service, and bonds of mutual and intimate friendship. But a vigilant and restraining public lando, in replying to the pressing entreaty opinion surrounds our slaves with a cumulative security. The master is no chartered libertine. Custom, the greatest of lawgivers, places visible metes and bounds upon his authority which few are so hardy as to transcend. Native humanity and Christian principle inscribe their limitations upon the living tables of his heart. A public sentiment, growing in its strength and increasing in its exactions, covers the slave with a protecting shield, far less easily or frequently broken through, than those feeble barriers of law which in our Free States, are interposed between the degraded and outeast black man, and his white bro-

as accurate exponents of the rights and proceeds from a combination of circumstanvision and restraint. It looks to the whole range of their happiness and improvement. ship of this arrangement disappears when large extent terminated that disruption of tinet spheres of duty, may be the wisest family ties, which has always constituted the and most merciful provision for each, most serious obstacle to the improvement of Every age rises to a higher level of general the slave, and the severest hardship of his intelligence, but the mass of men must be lot. A Scotch weaver, William Thompson, satisfied with that prime wisdom, "to know who travelled through our Southern States that before us lies in daily life." Whilst I in 1843, on foot, sustaining himself by doubt not that, manual labour, and mixing constantly with our slave population, states in a book which "Through the ages one increasing purpose separation of families did not take place And the thoughts of men are widened with the here to such an extent as amongst the labouring poor of Scotland. We know that yet so long as the Divine Ordinance, the the evil has been diminishing with every poor ye have always with you, remains unsucceeding day, and I trust that public sen-repealed—an ordinance without which the timent will not leave this most beneficent fruits of industry would be consumed, and work half done. The sanctity and integrity its accumulations cease, the classes of sociof the family union is the germ of all civ- ety must be divided by a broad line of disilization. There is nothing in slavery to parity in intellectual culture. Emancipamake its violation inevitable. It may retion would not relieve the slave from the quire some time and sacrifice to accommo-necessities of daily labour, or furnish the date the habits of society to the universal leisure for extending mental cultivation. prevalence of a permanent tenure in these There might be individual exceptions; but relations. But through the agency of pub- all legislation must take its rule from the lie sentiment alone, acting upon buyer and general course of human nature, not its acseller, and operating where necessary through cidental departures and variations. It is combinations of benevolent neighbours, the emancipation and not servitude, which mischief in its entire dimensions lies within would forever darken and extinguish those the grasp of remedy.

the scale of civilization, beyond which it hope. The slave will partake more and does not permit the labourer to rise. God, more of the life-giving civilization of the it is argued, has conferred the capacity and master. As it is, his intimate relations with imposed the duty of improvement, but man the superior race, and the unsystematic inforever denies the opportunity. I admit struction he receives in the family, have that the refining, elevating, and liberalizing placed him in point of general intelligence influences of knowledge can not be impart- above a large portion of the white labourers ed to the slave, in an equal degree with his of Enrope. It appears from the most remaster. But this arises from the fact that cent statistics, that one half the adult pop-privileges of a people, are most fallacious ees which human laws could not alter, and when appealed to as a standard, by which which render daily toil the unavoidable porto determine the character of a system of tion of the black man. Civilization is a slavery; for the wisest and most humane complex result, demanding a multitude of must acknowledge that the introduction of special offices and functions, for whose perlaw may so disturb the harmony and good formance men are fitted, and even reconcilwill of any domestic relation, as to breed ed by gradations in intelligence and culture. more mischief than it can possibly cure. It However exalting or ennobling might be is not simply in reference to the food, clothing, work, holydays, punishments of slaves, God in his providence has denied to the that public sentiment exercises its super-larger part of the human family, the oppor-It is operating with great force in inducing we reflect that this life is only a school of masters to provide more extended facilities discipline and probation for another, and for their religious instruction. It has to a that a variety of condition involving dis-

runs,

prospects of amelioration that now lie im-Slavery is charged with fixing a point in aged in the bright perspective of Christian he is a labourer, not that he is a slave. It ulation of England and Wales are unable wrote those touching lines-

"But knowledge to their eyes her ample page, Rich with the spoils of time, did ne'er unroll; Chill penury repressed their noble rage, And froze the genial current of the soul."

never be instructed without danger to the there has been no sober and intelligent public safety, as knowledge, like the admis-estimate of its distinctive features; no just sion of light into a subterranean mine, apprehension of the nature, extent and permight lead to an explosion. There may be manence of the disparities between the circumstances in which the supreme law of races, or of the fatal consequences to the self-preservation will command us to with-slave, of a freedom which would expose him hold from the slave the degree of informato the unchecked selfishness of a superior tion we would gladly impart. But it is civilization; no conception approaching to never to be forgotten, that this stern and the reality of the power which has been sibility of its existence will lie at the door the universal instincts of self-interest, in of the misjudging philanthropy which has tempering the severity of its restraints, and them hospitable welcome.

to write their names. It was of English feet discharge of our duties in this, and in labourers, not American slaves, that Gray every other relation of life: but for its justice and morality as an element of our social polity, we may confidently appeal to those future ages, which, when the bedimming mists of passion and prejudice have vanished, will examine it in the pure light of truth, and pronounce the final sentence of But it is supposed that our slaves can impartial History. Beyond our own borders inexorable necessity will not be created by exerted by a public sentiment, springing the system itself. The sin, and the respon-from Christian principle, and sustained by rashly and ignorantly interposed to adjust impressing upon it the mild character of a relations on whose balance hang great issues patriarchal relation; no rational anticipation of liberty and civilization. If the views of the improvement of which the negro which have been presented are true, the would be capable under our form of servimore his reason was instructed, the clearer tude, if those who now nurse the wild and would be the slave's perception of the gene-ral equity of the arrangement which fixed tion, should lend all their energies to the his lot. But if knowledge is to introduce maintenance of the only social system under him to literature which will confuse his un- which his progressive amelioration appears derstanding by its sophistry, whilst it in-possible. African slavery is no relic of flames his passions by its appeals, which barbarism to which we cling from the will exaggerate his rights and magnify his ascendency of semi-civilized tastes, habits, wrongs, then mercy to the slave, as well as and principles; but an adjustment of the justice to society, require us to protect him social and political relations of the races, from the folly and crime into which he consistent with the purest justice, commen-might be hurried by the madness of moral ded by the highest expediency, and sancintoxication. We will not throw open our tioned by a comprehensive and enlightened gates, that the enemies of peace may sow humanity. It has no doubt been sometimes the dragon's teeth of discord, and leave us abused by the base and wicked passions of to reap a harvest of confusion and rebel- our fallen nature to purposes of cruelty and lion-but when they come to plant love wrong; but where is the school of civilizaamongst us, to teach apostolic precepts, as tion from which the stern and wholesome clementary morality, and to hold up the discipline of suffering has been banished? standard of Holy Scripture as the rule of or the human landscape not saddened by a conduct, and proof of law, we will give dark-flowing stream of sorrow? Its history when fairly written, will be its ample vindi-If I have at all comprehended the ele-cation. It has weaned a race of savages ments which should enter into the determi- from superstition and idolatry, imparted to nation of this momentous problem of social them a general knowledge of the precepts welfare and public authority, the existence of the true religion, implanted in their of African Slavery amongst us, furnishes no bosom sentiments of humanity and princijust occasion for self-reproach; much less ples of virtue, developed a taste for the arts for the presumptuous rebuke of our fellow and enjoyments of civilized life, given an man. As individuals, we have cause to unknown dignity and elevation to their type humble ourselves before God, for the imper- of physical, moral and intellectual man, and izing process has taken place, made for their which we would be banned not blessed, outsubsistence and comfort, a more bountiful lawed not protected, whether by faction provision, than was ever before enjoyed in under the forms of law or revolution over any age or country of the world by a labor-them I care not, has no charms for me. ing class. If tried by the test which we The Union I love, is that which our fathers apply to other institutions, the whole sum of formed; a Union which, when it took its its results, there is no agency of civilization place upon the majestic theatre of history, which has accomplished so much in the consecrated by the benedictions of patriots same time, for the happiness and advance- and freemen, and covered all over with ment of our race. the preservation of our peace and union, our established not only as a bond of strength, property and liberty depend upon the tri- but as a pledge of justice and a sacrament umph of these opinions over the delusion of affection; a Union which was intended, and ignorance which have obscured and like the arch of the heavens, to embrace perplexed the public judgment upon this within the span of its beneficent influence question of slavery. I believe that they all interests and sections and to rest oppresindicate the only tenable line of argument sively or unequally upon none; a Union in along which we can defend our rights or which the North and the South-"like the character. So long as men regard all forms double-celled heart, at every full stroke," of slavery as sinful, they will be conducted beat the pulses of a common liberty and a to the conclusion that any aid or comfort to common glory. Mr. Madison has recorded them, is likewise sinful, by a logical neces- a beautiful incident, which occurring as the sity, which their passions or interests can members of the Federal Convention were only resist for a time. The conviction that attaching their signatures to the Constitujustice is the highest expediency for the tion, forms a fitting and significant close to statesman, the first duty of the Christian, its proceedings. Dr. Franklin pointing to and should be supreme law of the State, the painting of a sun which hung behind will sooner or later establish its supremacy over all combinations of parties and inter-culty which is said to exist in discriminating ests. So long as our fellow-citizens of the between the picture of a rising and a set-North look upon this relation as barbarous ting sun, remarked that during the progress and corrupting, they must and ought to de- of their deliberations, he had often looked sire and seek its extinction, as a great vice at this painting and been doubtful as to its and crime. Every year will deepen their sympathy with the slave, suffering under it was a rising sun. When the faney of unjust bonds, and inflame their resentful Franklin gave to the painting its auroral indignation towards the master who holds hues, she had dipped her pencil in his his odious property with unrelaxing grasp. heart. Let but a healing conviction of the association upon which either individuals enter into the public sentiment of the or societies can or ought to live together. North; let it understand that the South is How long could our Union endure, if it was seeking to discharge, not simply the obligaan accumulating burthen of reproach? We race; and that if it has not accomplished are willing to give much for Union. We will more, it is because its people, like the workgive territory for it; the broad acres we have men upon Solomon's temple, have been already surrendered would make an empire. compelled to labour on their social fabric with We will give blood for it; we have shed it the trowel in one hand, and the sword in freely upon every field of our country's the other: and the old feelings of mutual danger and renown. We will give love regard would soon follow a mutual respect But much as we value it, we will not pur-would be buried in the duties of the

for two centuries during which this human- [A union of suspicion, aversion, injustice, in images of fame, was a fellowship of equal I am fully persuaded, Mr. President, that and fraternal States; a Union which was Mutual self-respect is the only term of true character of our system of slavery to be preserved by submission to a fixed tions of justice, but the larger debt of policy of injustice, and acquiescence under Christian humanity towards this degraded for it; the confiding, the forgiving, the overflowing love of brothers and freemen. animosities and dissentions of the past chase it at the price of liberty or character. Present and the Hopes of the Future; the memories of our great heroic age would mind of our society be fully awakened to breathe over us a second spring of patri- the magnitude of its responsibilities, and otism: the comprehensive American sentil thoroughly instructed in the duties of its ment which framed this league of love mission: let it meet the falsifications of his-would revive in all its quickening power, in tory, and perversions of philosophy, and the bosoms of our people, spreading undi-corruptions of religion, in the varied forms vided over every portion of our territory, of wise and temperate discussion; let it and operating unspent through all general catch the spirit of Milton, when he was tions of our history; the Union would be content to lose his sight in writing for the so clasped in the North, and in the South, defence of the liberties of England, and into our heart of hearts, that death itself spired by yet deeper enthusiasm in a cause could not tear loose the clinging tendrils of upon which may depend the liberties and devotion; and that emblematic painting in civilization of the whole earth, now in comwhich our fathers, with "no form nor feeling mon peril from a universal licentiousness of in their souls, unborrowed from their county opinion, unseal all its fountains of wit, elotry," greeted with patriot prayer and hope, quence and logic; and there would soon set the rising beams of morning, would never out from our Southern coast, a great moral by any line of lessening light, betoken to the Gulf Stream, able to penctrate and warm all eyes of their children a parting radiance.

and Providence. Let but the educated tides.

I have an abiding faith in Time, Truth come in strength and volume of ocean

Note.-This Address at the time of its delivery had not been entirely committed to writing. The author has sometimes found it impossible to recall the exact language which was then employed. He has, also, after conference with some members of the Executive Committee of the State Agricultural Society, added an oceasional statement and illustration, which the limits of the oral discourse obliged him to omit-

